

New website, new challenge

Description

Welcome to my new website!

I decided to move from my old Blogger blog (which thanks to technology will now automatically be re-directed here) since everything was too scattered on the internet and I wanted it in one convenient place. That said, it is still very much a work in progress, and if you have any suggestions in way to improve or change the website, please let me know either through a comment or the contact form located in the menu bar.

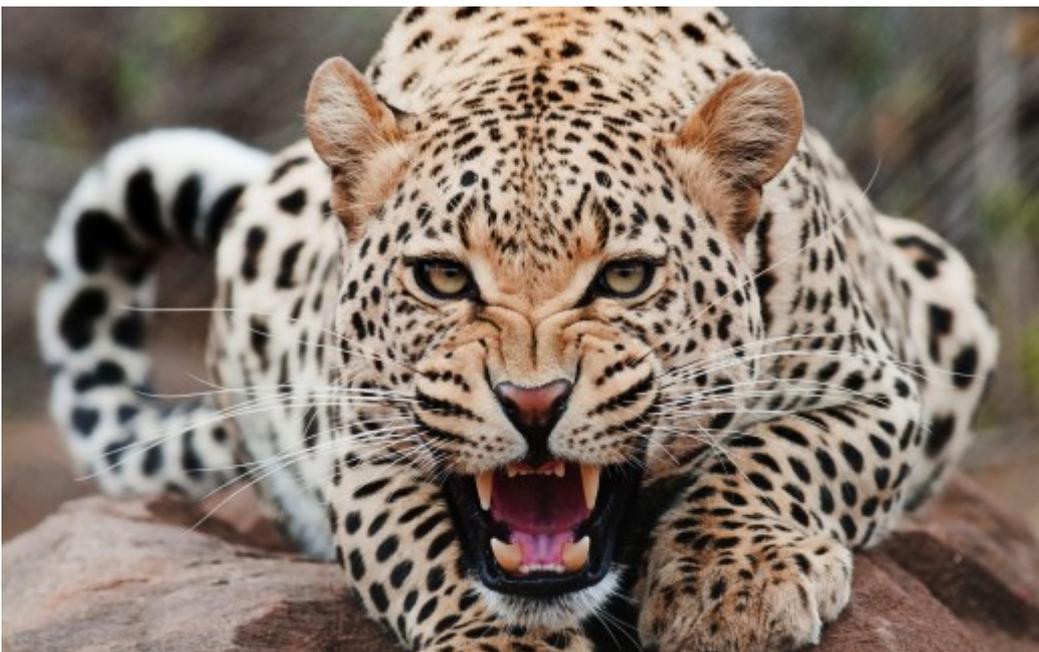

Now, on to some new business.

I am going to do something a little bit different in February â€” Iâ€™m going to create a series of theme posts every week day. Every day of the week there will be a new post on this website regarding my favourite things in the world: Animals.

I have countless books about animals in my possession, so I am going to use a random number generator, and randomly pick an animal in one of my many books to feature that day. Every animal is up for grabs, living or dead, and I will find something interesting about them.

The only exception will be that I will be going to the Science Online Together conference at the end of February, so I may not be able to get posts up on those days. But I will try!

Stay tuned next week for the beginning of â€œFeral Februaryâ€” â€” I hope you enjoy it.
